R. S. Radford is director of Pacific Legal Foundation's Judicial Awareness Program, where he oversees the drafting and publication of legal scholarship designed to help offset the prevailing left-wing bias in the nation's law schools and universities. Mr. Radford holds a graduate degree in economics as well as a law degree from the University of Southern California. He has published widely, including articles in The Annals of Regional Science, Reason, Loyola Law Review, University of Southern California Law Review, Southwestern University Law Review, Fordham Urban Law Journal, Fordham Environmental Law Journal, Stetson Law Review, and New York University Environmental Law Journal.

As a principal attorney in PLF's property rights practice group, Mr. Radford has appeared before the United States Supreme Court, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the highest state courts of New York and California on behalf of property owners whose constitutional rights have been violated by intrusive government regulation and control. He has appeared frequently as a speaker and panelist on property rights and takings issues across the United States. Mr. Radford has served as Adjunct Professor of Law at the University of the Pacific, McGeorge School of Law; has been honored as California Lawyer of the Year, and is listed in Who's Who in America.
